c. The National Archives Records Service (NARS) called the Office of Information Services (OIS) to advise that a British author was asking NARS for help in upgrading the quality of a microfilm copy of an OSS cable chrono file. This is part of the OSS material known as the Donovan papers. The author was given the material by David Donovan for use in writing a biography of his late father, William Donovan. NARS will ask the author for portions of the microfilm to see whether it can be upgraded, and OIS will attempt to identify what records it contains. If the material proves to be the OSS Washington Headquarters chrono file, it will probably contain some information that should remain classified. OIS will remain in close coordination with NARS on this.

d. The Combined SAFE Project Office gave a SAFE status briefing on 17 October to the annual DoD Intelligence Information System Managers Conference held at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. This was an opportunity to bring the representatives of the worldwide defense intelligence community up to date on SAFE.
